More good tips for restful sleep...

Reset your slumber cycle

Even if you get enough sleep, you could still feel tired if you rise in the middle of a sleep cycle. Follow this formula: Count back 7.5 hours (five 90-minute sleep cycles) from when you want to get up. Go to bed then! If you don't feel better after a week, move your bedtime 15 minutes earlier.

Eat snacks that make you drowsy

Say good night to insomnia with a trail mix of dried cherries and walnuts. Both are good sources of melatonin—the hormone that regulates sleep-wake cycles—and can improve sleep quality.

Watch for this sleep symptom

Frequent nighttime peeing predicted sleep apnea 85% of the time—as accurate as snoring, a recent study found. Apnea sufferers struggle to breathe, creating more blood flow in the body, the kidneys then extract more water from your blood and produce more urine. Treating sleep apnea reduces nighttime urination dramatically.

First impressions count....the kind of relationship we'll have with someone is set within three minutes of meeting them. The first impression carries more weight than anything else you do or say. Make those 180 seconds count!

Subconjunctival hemorrhage...

Otherwise known as a broken blood vessel in your eye.

This condition causes blood to pool in the eye for a week or two before it heals, but it looks a lot scarier than it is. It is usually the result of rubbing your eye, or exerting yourself and stressing the fragile blood vessels in your eyes until one bursts. If you get these hemorrhages more than just every once in a while, see a specialist. It could be a sign of a bleeding disorder.

Scarlet and yellow, russet and brown,
Leaves in the garden are swept in a heap,
The trees are ready for sleep.
